Built in 1868 by Dr. Newman Rowley, the two-story, yellow-clay brick building is a Middleton Landmark. The building is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and houses one of the Midwest's largest and most comprehensive displays of Depression Glass, with more than 150 patterns.

Exhibits show how early Middleton residents lived and worked. The museum features:

- Native American artifacts
- Medical equipment from the 1800s to illustrate how the three generations of Rowley doctors served Middleton
- Turn-of-the century cooking implements and appliances
- Old-fashioned toys and school materials
- Uniforms and other military items from war veterans from Middleton
- Photographs and manuscripts of early Middleton
- Histories of area churches, schools and businesses

A carriage house in back showcases early farm implements and tools and contains a life-size horse and buggy depicting Dr. Rowley visiting his patients.
